The idea

The "MORE intercultural competence" project aims to organize a training course to train education professionals on the management of intercultural conflicts created by a situation of mass migration. Through the educational tool MORE, as a role-playing game, participants will be invited to reflect on the social and personal dynamics underlying migratory processes: prejudices, stereotypes, fears, integration, etc. The game itself will be presented as a useful means of responding to micro-conflict situations that everyone is called upon to manage in their professional environment.

Objectives

- Reflect and clarify the concept of individual identity;
- Understand that individual identity connects with collective individuality (us);
- Understand those society-based collective identities delimit an area of inclusion and an area of exclusion (you);
- Recognizing and deconstructing stereotypes and prejudices against foreigners;
- How we acquire information (data) about the topic (which are the sources, media literacy);
- Know how to recognize the difference between data and interpretations on the migrant topic;
- Provide participants with a practical educational tool for contributing to the raising of intercultural awareness in their communities and daily activities

Profile of participants

- Youth Workers, Teachers, Trainers, Educators 18+ years old, preferably over 25
- Individuals coming from migrant backgrounds who are currently working with young migrants and refugees
- Committed to promoting human rights, inclusivity, and positive youth development
- Willing to enhance their knowledge, skills, and attitudes related to migration and intercultural competence

About MORE

MORE is an educational tool for conflict management. It simulates a negotiation for the resolution of a multinational dispute, through an international round table: the massive migration in an imaginary country called Enotria.

MORE stands for Mediation on Responsibilities and Exploitations. This name effectively describes the way in which the migratory situation is dealt with within the world – particularly in Europe.

MORE is not only an acronym, it represents 'more' skills, knowledge and attitude that are developed through role play.
